Wallpapers of the.Landlord: ‘Developers are VERY bad!’

“Tenant turnover” caused by “developers”. That’s one way to describe the current housing landscape. And to make matters worse, this landlord said they are losing roughly $40,000 on average in rent each month, according to the Real Estate Center for the MLS. There are other ways to describe the current status of the rental housing market. According to the Federal Reserve: “The share of homeownership among first-time buyers for the entire nation declined for the first time in several years in 2016.” Over the past 2 years: “15% of first time buyers fail to purchase a home.” That is a 10% increase over 1 year ago. For those that do purchase a home: "Median house price rose 19.8% from January to September." In other words, home prices are rising quickly. And renters are left wondering, when will I be able to buy a home? Related Post navigation 2 thoughts on "Landlord: 'Developers are VERY bad!'" Have been renting for 15 years in Medford in Central CA. Used to buy and rent the same house for 25 years. Just moved to southern Oregon last December. Got married in April and have been renting a small apartment for about 10 months now. We have savings to use in the next 3 years on our wedding, but have no hopes of buying our own home anytime soon. I am finally starting to get it that my situation is pretty normal. It makes me happy when people here in Medford complain about how hard it is to find places to rent and how there are so many people who want to rent. I know it is really hard to find somewhere and the list of the places we have looked at can take hours. There are

I'm trying to find the length of the string using the strlen() function. The source code is as follows: #include #include #include main() { int len = strlen("this is a string"); printf("%d", len); return 0; } According to the manual, it should print "4" (or "5" for the "Th" from "th" - C implementation), but it gives an error: main.c:4: error: conflicting types for 'strlen' /usr/include/string.h:54: note: previous declaration of 'strlen' was here I'm using "gcc 4.5.3" on ubuntu 12.04 and "gcc --version" gives me "gcc (Ubuntu/Linaro 4.5.3-1ubuntu1) 4.5.3". What is wrong here? A: You forgot the ; at the end of the main function. In C the return type of main is int, which is the reason for the error message you are seeing. A:
